Many parents spend a large amount of time playing with their children wishing to build a close relationship with them. These workshops introduce the PACT program, an evidence-based program, which guides parents to use “interactive play skills” tailored for their children with varied level of language ability to help them gradually enjoy the rewards of interactive communication, and eventually, improved social skills.

These workshops are suitable for parents and caregivers of children who have communication challenges, in particular those on the autistic spectrum, have no or limited verbal skills and are below the age of 12.
